E. Course Materials Developed

The University of Kentucky

Disease Detectives: Epidemiology in Action (CPH 310): Designed an undergraduate epidemiology course to integrate biostatistics, biology, chemistry, and physics in the investigation of the causes of diseases and prevention measures.

MPH Capstone Research (CPH 608): Created a course that guides students towards initiation of a capstone research project. Students develop a research question and learn how to evaluate the literature and design research methods towards exploring that question. By the end of the course students are expected to have a research topic and database, and are assigned an advisor.

Infectious Disease Epidemiology (CPH 612): Revised the lecture content, increased the number of homework exercises and case studies, and added exercises on infectious disease study design and evaluation of epidemiology literature concerning infectious disease causation.

Occupational and Environmental Epidemiology (CPH 617): Revised the lecture content, increased the number of homework exercises, and added exercises on study design and evaluation of epidemiology literature concerning disease causation.

Occupational & Environmental Health (CPH 620): Developed lectures and homework exercises on exposure assessment and occupational and environmental diseases.

Occupational Field Studies (CPH 698): Conduct walk-through field surveys of a wide variety of industries, complete exercises, and hazard analyses.

Chronic Disease Epidemiology (CPH 711): Developed lecture content including information on a great number of chronic diseases and developed a set of homework exercises associated with each lecture.

Epidemiology Study Design (CPH 714): In collaboration with Dr. Steven Browning, developed a new course to prepare doctoral level students to design epidemiologic studies, manage and analyze data, and present results.

Advanced Epidemiology Research Methods (CPH 715): Developed a new course to prepare doctoral level students to conduct epidemiologic studies, manage and analyze data, interpret and present results. The final product for the course is a manuscript submitted for publication in the peer-reviewed literature.

Health and Safety of Agricultural Populations (CPH 720): Created a course to support the Agricultural Health and Safety Core of the Education Research Center training students about the health and safety hazards faced by agricultural and rural populations.

Doctoral Seminar (CPH 786): Developed colloquium sessions to supplement the Epidemiology and Biostatistics core curriculum, discuss current research, and enhance student writing and oral skills.

Doctoral Seminar in Research Methods (CPH 995): Designed the curriculum to instruct students on how to write a research proposal. The purpose of the final proposal (submitted for grading) was for it to serve as the first chapters of the students' capstone projects. Students were required to orally present their study design and submit an NIH formatted research proposal as the final product for the course.

The University of Iowa

Industrial Hygiene 1: Recognition (175:231): Developed the lecture content, homework exercises, and included instruction on aerosol science, biomonitoring, and bioaerosols.

Fundamentals of Industrial Hygiene (175:231): Developed course content to comprehensively cover a broad range of industrial hygiene topics.

Industrial Hygiene 2: Evaluation (175:232): Increased the number of laboratory exercises from eight to fourteen and revised the course content.

Assessing Physical Agent Hazards (175:232): Developed course on evaluating and controlling noise, temperature, pressure, nonionizing radiation, and ionizing radiation hazards.

Occupational Health (175:230): Increased the number of industrial hygiene lectures from five to nine and developed homework exercises and examination in association with these lectures.

Health Physics for Occupational Hearing Conservationists: Developed 3 hours of instruction on health physics for the Certified Occupational Hearing Conservationist course which is taught through the College of Nursing.

Facts About Mold: Along with four other instructors, developed a course on evaluating workplace exposures and potential health effects from mold and provided guidance on remediation of mold contamination; this course was a one-day continuing education course for the Heartland Center for Occupational Health and Safety (March 2003).

Workshop on Agroterrorism: Developed instructional materials and presented a one-day workshop on agroterrorism which was hosted by the University of Texas; the workshop was conducted via multiple-site conferencing to locations in several Midwestern and Southern states (January 2004).

Selecting Proper Respiratory Protection: Along with three other instructors, developed a course on selecting proper respiratory protection for various occupational situations; this course was a one-day continuing education course for the Heartland Center for Occupational Health and Safety (March 2004).

Course materials developed for courses taught outside The University of Iowa and the University of Kentucky:

University of Zulia, Maracaibo, Venezuela: Developed and taught 2-week training course on evaluating and controlling hazards in Portland cement plants and coal mines (June 1981).

Fairmont State University: Developed course curriculum and taught lecture and lab courses concerning industrial hygiene, occupational safety, ergonomics, epidemiology and statistics. Established training program between NIOSH and Fairmont State College which provided students with experience conducting field surveys and laboratory experiments (1980-1988).

University of North Carolina: Developed lectures and laboratory exercises for occupational epidemiology course for School of Public Health graduate students (1986).

American Industrial Hygiene Association: Developed continuing education course entitled Pesticide Exposure Assessment for presentation at professional meeting (1991-1992).

American Industrial Hygiene Association: Developed continuing education course entitled Occupational Epidemiology for presentation at professional conferences (1993-1994).

South Africa: Developed materials and presented training course entitled Health and Safety Concerns Associated with Pesticide Exposures to health and safety professionals in Johannesburg and Durban, South Africa (1999).

Industrial Hygiene for Nurses: Developed a one-day continuing education course on the principles of industrial hygiene which was taught at the American Association of Occupational Health Nurses conference in Kansas City, Missouri (May 2004) and Minneapolis, Minnesota (May 2005).

Portland Cement Association: Developed continuing education course entitled Principles of Occupational Epidemiology for presentation to Portland Cement Health and Safety Committee (Oct 2005).

Occupational Epidemiology: Developed continuing education course for presentation to nurses, physicians, physician assistants, industrial hygienists, and safety professionals of various venues. (March/May 2006; June 2007; June 2008)

Statistical Methods for Environmental Data Subject to Detection Limits

This project involves developing unified and efficient nonparametric estimation and testing methods that can deal with possible correlation between the exposure level and detection limits and incorporate sampling weights. The project will utilize state-of-the-art methods for censored survival data and tailor them to environmental exposure data with detection limits. These methods will be applied to data from a recently conducted colon cancer case-control study in Kentucky, an ongoing lung cancer case-control study in Kentucky, and the NHANES.
